BISHOP'S BULLETIN TO VICAR JAIRO

Dear Jairo,

The thin red bricks of St Albans are an appealing feature of our cathedral city. They are found in profusion around the Roman ruins and have been adopted in many newer buildings as an echo of Verulamium's ancient roots. The tower of the abbey church - built in the late eleventh century - utilised many thousands of these, and we see the same style wandering in through the welcome centre constructed in the present one.

Our life together is constantly being built and rebuilt in different ways, using what has been passed down. We speak of being 'self-made' men or women but really there is no such thing; each of us being constructed in large part by what is around and before us.

There's a line I say from the Psalms each morning which says of God: 'It is He that hath made us and not we ourselves'. (Psalm 100, called 'Jubilate' in the Prayer Book).

In other words, our prayer, and our life, begin by recognising God as our maker, whatever we may make of this fact. And it struck me this week that the Christian has two construction projects going on at the same time: the 'us' we are constructing for ourselves and the 'us' God is making us into, so that we reflect his likeness ever more clearly. Growing up into the Christian life, it seems to me, is about realising how vitally important it is to trust and allow God, our master builder, to do this work within us. To make us, brick by brick, into a spiritual house where he settles and dwells.

With the assurance of my prayers,

Andrew
